I purchased the level 1 books to enjoy reading to my kindergardener and as a first grader she revisited them by rereading them to me. Close reading is a comprehension strategy taught in all schools that requires literature to be read and reread and reread developing comprehension skills each time it's read. Each level is considered mastered when the student can read the book at a pace similar to the pace of everyday conversation and when the child understands what is being read. Begin young children with the pre-primer books. Read, read and then reread again. Eventually you will discover that they will begin reading them to you. The beauty of these books is that there are many books at each level and they are easily identified in the big colored circle on the front cover. When your child can confidently read you the stories at a good pace and answer questions about the story well you can begin reading the next level to them. The process continues through each level. I can't think of another way that parents, even the busy ones, who want to simply enjoy literature or enforce literacy as it is done at school in such a straight forward easy to follow way.

My four-year-old had several common sight words and had begun to spell simple words by spelling them out. I knew he was ready to start reading but couldn't find any books on his level. Most books had too many words with more than one syllable even though they were for preschool/kindergarten. I found this book at the library, and he immediately began reading many of the words. He was so proud of himself! I highly recommend this book for any beginning reader. It has mostly one syllable words unlike the other books. I plan on buying several books from the Road to Reading series in the future myself.

My 3 year daughter has loved this book ever since we purchased it. She has memorized it and can "read us a story" all by herself. This one is very similar to the other story Panda Kisses (which she loves just as much). Very cute stories for little ones just getting interested in reading.

My four year old daughter loves this book. We also appreciate the value of a mom and a dad loving a child for the best hug ever.

He loved it. We could read this over and over again. It makes me want to give my little bear a hug.
