Customer Reviews

As a mother who screens everything her 13-year-old daughter reads, I always enjoy checking out books that are not necessarily list-toppers. Yes, we get disappointed sometimes, because, well, books don't make the lists because they are not well-written. However, at other times, as was the case with "A Suzanna Snow Mystery: The Midnight Tunnel" by Angie Frazier", we were disappointed about the reverse: that this very decent book didn't make it to any kind of recommended reading book list - and it should. Although the time is 1904, the setting is reminiscent of "The Mystery of the Martello Tower" by Jennifer Lanthier (previously reviewed, also way under-rated) and Andrew Clements' "Benjamin Pratt and the Keepers of the School" series, while the female protagonist brings to mind Alan Bradley's Flavia de Luce and Nancy Springer's Enola Holmes (see below for said daughter's review). Readers looking for something less predictable than the trusted standbys Trixie Belden and Nancy Drew would enjoy the adventures Suzanna and her friends get up to. This is a nice summer read, which, if committed to film, would make a terrific after-school special!" 'A Suzanna Snow Mystery: The Midnight Tunnel' by Angie Frazier was an interesting and captivating read."The main character is Suzanna 'Zanna' Snow, who knows she is a good detective - after all, she is the niece of the famous Bostonian detective, Bruce Snow. So when a seven-year-old girl disappears from her parent's hotel, Zanna is sure she knows what happened. So why won't anyone, besides Lucy, Isaac and Will, believe her? Then Zanna and her friends discover yet another crime about to unfold, and Zanna realizes she is in grave danger ..."My favorite characters were definitely Zanna and Will. Zanna reminds me of Enola Holmes.
